Billinghaus, the greengrocer, who has a wonderful aptitude for mental arithmetic, makes a point of selling small or large quantities at the same price, which leads occasionally to some interesting, although simple, problems. Can you tell the price of sugar and flour when he sells one customer eight pounds of sugar and three of flour for 61 cents, while to little Maggie he gave five pounds of each for 50 cents?

ANSWER TO THE FIREMAN'S PUZZLE. The fire chief stated that the ladder had less than 100 rungs, and since we could see twenty-five rungs in the picture, it becomes necessary to find a ladder with more than twenty-five and less than 100 rungs, which would agree with all the facts in the picture as well as the chief's statement. Tom made steps of five rungs and came out even at top. Dick stepped four rungs, and his next step takes him within two rungs of the top. Harry proceeded three rungs at a time, and from his position on the ladder it is simple to figure out that his last step at that rate will take him within one rung of the top.

Therefore, the answer to the problem may be arrived at by finding a number which, divided by five, leaves no remain der, divided by four leaves a remainder of two, and when divided by three leaves a remainder of one. The only number between twenty-five and one hundred that will so work out is seventy, and the solution to the problem is that the ladder had seventy rungs.
